DEFENDANT THOMAS COOPER'S MOTION TO DISMISS

Defendant Thomas Cooper ("Defendant") respectfully moves for dismissal from this Action pursuant to FED R. CIV. P. 12(b)(2) and 12(b)(6) because personal jurisdiction is lacking and the Complaint fails to state any claim against Defendant upon which relief can be granted.

In accordance with Local Rule 7.1(a), counsel for the Defendant conferred with counsel for Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs declined to assent to the specific relief requested in this Motion.

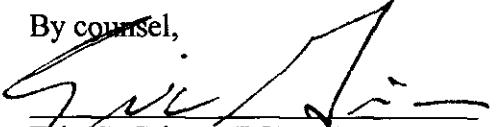

This Motion is accompanied by a supporting brief.

Wherefore, Defendant Thomas Cooper respectfully prays that all claims against him by Plaintiffs be dismissed WITH PREJUDICE.

THOMAS COOPER,

By counsel,

INTRODUCTION

Although this Action involves a relatively novel context – namely, the use of Domain Names as Internet addresses – the core question presented by this Motion is quite old, remarkably straightforward, and controlled by a well-established body of law:¹ Under what circumstances may a plaintiff hale non-resident defendants from faraway jurisdictions into its home jurisdiction? Or, to paraphrase the basic civil procedure question: Can Ford sue the world from Detroit?

Here, Plaintiff, a multinational corporation, attempts to require approximately 72 Defendants domiciled in jurisdictions throughout the world to appear and defend themselves in Detroit on the basis of remarkably insubstantial alleged “jurisdictional contacts.” The alleged “contacts” consist of nothing more than (1) the registration of a Domain Name by each Defendant, using registration services that are uniformly located outside the State of Michigan, (2) the alleged visibility of a Website called Great Domains (published outside Michigan by one Defendant only – namely, Great Domains), and (3) in some (but not all) cases, the establishment of passive, non-interactive web sites by one or more Defendants other than Great Domains, employing the Domain Names in question as addresses in ways that could not possibly cause “confusion” (as that term of art is used in the Lanham Trademark Act) on the part of Website visitors. The overwhelming weight of authority counsels that personal jurisdiction cannot be asserted in Michigan over any non-resident Defendant under the circumstances alleged by Plaintiffs.

This Motion also presents the question whether the bare allegation that a Domain

Name appears in a listing on a Website such as Great Domains, standing alone, is sufficient to state a per se claim for trademark infringement, trademark dilution, or “cybersquatting.” We argue, based again on long-standing and uncontroversial precedent in this Circuit, that such an allegation, standing alone, is always insufficient as a matter of law to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. In short, a more substantial factual basis supporting Plaintiff’s prayer for transfer or cancellation of such a Domain Name is always required in order to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) dismissal motion.

This motion is brought on behalf of Defendant Thomas Cooper, along with several motions on behalf of several similarly-situated Defendants (the “EFF Defendants”). All of the EFF Defendants are either: (1) fans of Plaintiffs’ cars; (2) automotive repair and parts shops that specialize in fixing Plaintiffs’ automobiles or helping people to locate used automobiles; or (3) persons such as the two “jaguar” sites who are engaged in speech that has nothing whatsoever to do with Plaintiffs and instead relates to the large endangered cats whose name Plaintiffs have appropriated. The larger question presented by this action, should it go forward, is whether the multitude of different speakers and constituencies who populate the Internet will stand on an equal footing, with fair and equal opportunities to reach their intended audiences, or whether the trademark constituency (relative latecomers to the Internet) – comprised of companies like Ford -- will so come to dominate the Domain Name System that the Internet may evolve in the direction of George Orwell’s Animal Farm, in which the injunction “all animals are created equal,” was amended with the proviso, “but some animals are more equal than others.” Traditionally, trademark law does not permit companies like Ford to control the use of the words that make up its tradenames when those words are used in situations that involve no substantial danger of confusing the public, are not competitive with Ford and/or are traditionally allowed under the doctrines of fair use and non-trademark use. No rational basis exists for changing these traditional principles simply because this case is an “Internet case.” Therefore, Ford’s attempt to use the novel context of the Internet to seek an exception from traditional and controlling principles of fair use should be rejected.

STATEMENT OF THE ISSUES PRESENTED

- I. Whether a trademark owner is entitled to force a non-resident Defendant to defend against litigation in the owner’s home jurisdiction when the sole alleged evidence of “purposeful availment” is mere visibility of one or more Websites – published elsewhere – from the forum state?
- II. Whether the factual allegations in Plaintiff’s Complaint involving this particular Defendant, and Plaintiff’s core theory of liability, are legally sufficient to survive dismissal under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), or whether Plaintiff’s theory of the case is fundamentally defective as a matter of law?

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Background -- The Internet and the Domain Name System: The Internet is a global meta-network of computer networks, Reno v. ACLU, 521 U.S. 844, 849-53 (1997), defined by the “Internet Protocol” that enables networked computers to exchange information. No two computers are permitted to have the same “IP address” simultaneously. Every IP address is a 32-bit number, such as CF290FCE₁₆ in Base-16 notation, often expressed as four Base-10 numbers between 0₁₀ and 256₁₀, separated by “dots,” hence 207.41.15.206 (the IP address for the Eastern District of Michigan Website “server” computer).

Because IP addresses are difficult to remember, long ago, when the National Science Foundation prohibited Internet advertising, network engineers devised the “Domain Name System” (“DNS”). Id.; see also Name.Space Inc. v. Network Solutions, Inc., 202 F.3d 573, 576-79 (2d Cir. 2000); Management of Internet Names and Addresses, 63 Fed. Reg. 31,741, 31,741-51 (1998).

Since its inception, the DNS has operated on a first-come, first-served basis. The first person to stake a claim to the Domain Name “clue.com” (the registrant -- not Hasbro, which owns CLUE®) has exclusive right to send and receive [myname]@clue.com electronic mail, and to publish a Website at www.clue.com.² See Hasbro v. Clue Computing, 66 F. Supp. 2d 117, 132-37 (D. Mass. 1999). Moreover, at least since Network Solutions, Inc. (“NSI”) assumed management of the central Registry, the DNS also explicitly operates on an all-you-can-eat basis. NSI even has a volume discount program. See <http://www.networksolutions.com/catalog/volumediscount/>.

Each Domain Name is unique. In the “.com” namespace all the good names are already taken. However, the designers of the DNS were engineers whose computer commands and filenames were sensitive even to one-character differences in spelling or syntax. Likewise, the DNS also is sensitive even to one-character differences. See, e.g., Brookfield Comm’n Inc. v. West Coast Entertainment, 174 F.3d 1036, 1055 n.18, 1066 (9th Cir. 1999) (“Even though [“MovieBuff”] differs from ‘Movie Buff’ by only a single space, that difference is pivotal” because “[t]he term ‘Movie Buff’ is a descriptive term, which is routinely used in the English

As the Internet opened to commerce, differences of opinion developed -- between commercial newcomers and many other established Internet constituencies -- concerning the interplay between trademarks and the Domain Name System. Additionally, in a few instances that were publicized with much fanfare, individuals such as Dennis Toeppen registered domain names identical to famous trademarks and then approached the trademark owners to ask for thousands of dollars in exchange for the transfer of these Domain Names. The actions of Dennis Toeppen and others who attempted to profit from the sale of trademark-identical domain names to the owners of the marks, came to be known as “cybersquatting.” Lawsuits triggered by “cybersquatting” -- such as Panavision v. Toeppen -- were quickly and effectively resolved in favor of the trademark owners. Subsequently, however, Congress also passed the “Cybersquatting Act” used by Plaintiffs in this lawsuit. The “Cybersquatting Act” generated some degree of controversy, and was opposed by some who shared the view that it was vague, unnecessary and duplicative of existing law. Nevertheless, the Cybersquatting Act was passed as part of the 1999 Omnibus Appropriations Act, and was signed into law by the President along with the rest of the Federal Budget for FY2000.

The historically-recognized line where mere lawful registration of a Domain Name becomes so-called “cybersquatting” is when (1) a trademark-identical Domain Name is registered (2) for no other purpose than (3) to be offered for sale (4) to the owner of a corresponding trademark (5) for a significant premium – as in Panavision Int’l, L.P. v. Toeppen, 141 F.3d 1316 (9th Cir. 1998). In other cases, Lanham Act violations have been found in cases where (1) a direct competitor, (2) registers a Domain Name identical to the trade-name of a competitor, and either (3)(a) deliberately withholds the trademark-identical Domain Name to prevent the direct competitor from establishing as effective an online presence, see Sporty's Farm, LLC v. Sportsman's Market, 202 F.3d 489 (2nd Cir. 2000), or alternatively, (3)(b) re-points the trademark-identical domain name to the registrant's own competing website. Washington Speaker's Bureau v. Leading Authorities, 33 F. Supp. 2d 488 (E.D. Va. 1999).

The present litigation involves no allegations whatsoever of any comparable so-called "bad faith" conduct by any Defendant, let alone any allegations specifically addressing the unique situation of the particular Defendant who seeks dismissal in this motion. In fact, Ford has completely failed here to distinguish among the unique circumstances of any of the Defendants named in the Complaint. Most importantly, Ford already owns the Domain Names for its tradenames: <Ford.com>, <Volvo.com>, <Jaguar.com> and <Astonmartin.com>. Ford's claims are based entirely on the use of its tradenames within other domains by persons who are not Plaintiffs' competitors and who are not engaged in selling cars.

In applying both the Lanham Act and the new ACPA, courts have repeatedly recognized that registration alone of an Internet Domain Name (even a trademark-identical name) does not (especially given the ubiquity of trademarks that seek to appropriate common words out of the language)³ automatically infringe any right of a trademark owner. Juno Online Servs., L.P. v. Juno Lighting, Inc., 979 F. Supp. 684, 691 (N.D. Ill. 1997) ("bare registration" of Domain Name non-infringing); Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Network Solutions, Inc., 985 F. Supp. 949,

956-57 (C.D. Cal. 1997) (same), aff'd, 194 F.3d 980 (9th Cir. 1999). Nor does the use of a Domain Name identical even to a "famous" trademark to publish a Website necessarily trigger any Lanham Act remedy. Hasbro, 66 F. Supp. 2d at 133.

Facts Specific to Defendant Thomas Cooper. Defendant Thomas Cooper is the owner of the Domain Name < vintagevolvos.com > but never launched or developed a Website using that Domain Name until he was sued by Plaintiffs. Decl. of Thomas Cooper ¶ 3 (Oct. 30, 2000) ("Cooper Decl."). Mr. Cooper has owned vintage Volvo automobiles since 1982 and intended to develop a Website using the vintagevolvos for Volvo automobile enthusiasts like himself. Cooper Decl. ¶ 4. The Website currently associated with the vintagevolvos Domain Name is a "gripe site" that Mr. Cooper developed after he was sued by Plaintiffs. Id. ¶ 3. The vintagevolvos Website does not enable visitors to buy or sell any goods or services. Id. ¶ 4. The Website is published exclusively on a "server" computer physically located in the State of New Jersey. Id. ¶ 15. Additionally, Mr. Cooper is a resident of the State of New Jersey, has never visited or lived in the State of Michigan, has never transacted any business in the State of Michigan, and has never had any other contact with State of Michigan. Id. ¶¶ 1, 6 – 14, 16, 17, 18.

Clearly, the Plaintiffs did not properly investigate the facts involving Defendant Thomas Cooper, or attempt to determine whether any legitimate basis existed to name this Defendant as a Defendant. Even the most cursory investigation of the facts would have revealed that there is no good-faith factual or legal basis for Ford to have named Mr. Cooper in this action.

Plaintiff's claims against Defendant Thomas Cooper are subject to dismissal for two reasons: (1) Mr. Cooper is not subject to personal jurisdiction in Michigan, and (2)

Plaintiff's substantive allegations in the Complaint concerning this particular Defendant are deficient as a matter of law to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and are subject to dismissal under FED. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

ARGUMENT AND AUTHORITIES

I. Defendant Thomas Cooper Must be Dismissed from this Litigation Because Mr. Cooper Is Not Subject to Personal Jurisdiction In Michigan.

Plaintiffs bear the sole burden of establishing the factual foundation for personal jurisdiction over any of the Defendants. Compuserve, Inc. v. Patterson, 89 F.3d 1257, 1262 (6th Cir. 1996). With respect to Defendant Thomas Cooper, Plaintiff cannot possibly satisfy that burden and all claims against Mr. Cooper filed in Michigan therefore must be dismissed.

In order to establish personal jurisdiction, Plaintiff must satisfy two separate and distinct requirements. Green v. Wilson, 455 Mich. 342, 348-51 & nn.4-6, 565 N.W.2d 813, 815-17 & nn.4-6 (1997) (holding Michigan "Long-Arm Statute" and Federal Due Process analyses cannot be collapsed into a single inquiry); Neogen Corp. v. Neo Gen Screening, Inc., 109 F. Supp. 2d 724, 727 (W.D. Mi. 2000); Neighbors v. Penske Leasing, Inc., 45 F. Supp. 2d 593, 597 (E.D. Mi. 1999). Plaintiff has the burden of establishing both (1) that one or more of the factual predicates necessary to trigger the Michigan Long-Arm statute⁴ have been satisfied with sufficient admissible evidence, and (2) that the exercise of personal jurisdiction by a Michigan court over this Defendant must be consistent with the dual Due Process requirements of ⁴ MICH. COMP. L. ANN. § 600.705 (specific personal jurisdiction over individuals); MICH. COMP. L. ANN. § 600.715 (corporations). The issue of "general jurisdiction," as opposed to "specific jurisdiction," need not be addressed because Defendant Thomas Cooper obviously cannot have sufficient jurisdictional contacts with Michigan to satisfy the Due Process requirements for general personal jurisdiction and Plaintiffs do not attempt to assert any general jurisdiction theory. See Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia, S.A. v. Hall, 466 U.S. 408, 414 & nn. 8-9 (1984) (discussing standards for specific and general jurisdiction, respectively).

“purposeful availment,” and “fair play and substantial justice.” Id.; Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253 (1958); International Shoe Co v. Washington, 326 U.S. 310, 316 (1945); Winfield Collection, Ltd. v. McCauley, 105 F. Supp. 2d 746, 748-49 (E.D. Mi. 2000). If either Due Process or the Long-Arm Statute is not satisfied, dismissal is mandatory. Id.

When faced with a properly supported Rule 12(b)(2) motion, the Plaintiffs must set forth sufficient facts establishing personal jurisdiction. Neighbors, at 595; see also Kerry Steel, Inc. v. Paragon Indus., 106 F.3d 147, 152-53 (6th Cir. 1997). Plaintiffs are not permitted to rest on pleadings alone, but must come forward with specific evidence in admissible form that, if believed, would be sufficient to support the exercise of personal jurisdiction.⁵ Theunissen v. Matthews, 935 F.2d 1454, 1458 (6th Cir.1991); Hi-Tex, Inc. v. TSG, Inc., 87 F. Supp. 2d 738, 741-42 (E.D. Mi. 2000). If the respective affidavits of the parties directly controvert one another, the Court may abuse its discretion by attempting to resolve jurisdiction on the affidavits alone, as opposed to holding an evidentiary hearing to resolve material factual disputes by a preponderance of the evidence. Theunissen, at 1465.

A. The Michigan Long-Arm Statute Is Not Satisfied.

None of the factual predicates required by the Michigan Long-Arm Statute are satisfied. As indicated previously, Mr. Cooper is a resident of the State of New Jersey, has never visited or lived in the State of Michigan, has never transacted any business in the State of Michigan, and has never had any other contact with State of Michigan. Cooper Decl. ¶¶ 1, 6 – 14,

16, 17 and 18. Accordingly, dismissal based on the complete absence of factors identified in the Long-Arm Statute has been properly supported by first-hand and admissible evidence. Thus, the burden is on Plaintiffs to respond with Defendant-specific and admissible evidence. In the absence of a proper and sufficient evidentiary showing, all claims against Mr. Cooper must be dismissed because the long-arm statute is not satisfied.

Plaintiff's Complaint improperly attempts to circumvent the requirements of the Long-Arm Statute by seeking to conflate two completely different things: (a) the mere visibility of a Website from Michigan, when the server computer is (as Plaintiffs must concede) located elsewhere⁶, with (b) the act of publication of the Website on a server computer physically located in Michigan. All five Courts of Appeal examining the issue of "jurisdiction-by-Website" have squarely rejected Plaintiff's approach. GTE New Media Servs. v. BellSouth Corp., 199 F.3d 1343, 1349 (D.C. Cir. 2000)⁷ (Edwards, C.J., Randolph, and Sentelle, J.J.) ("personal jurisdiction surely cannot be based solely on the [mere] ability of [Michigan] residents to access the defendants' Websites,⁸ for this does not by itself show any persistent course of conduct by the defendants in [Michigan]"); Soma Medical Intern. v. Standard Chtd. Bank, 196 F.3d 1292, 1297-99 (10th Cir. 1999); Mink v. AAAA Development, LLC, 190 F.3d 333 (5th Cir. 1999); Cybersell,

⁸ Unlike telephone numbers, the IP addresses of visitors accessing Websites have no geographic "area codes," making it impracticable to block access geographically. Hasbro v. Clue Computing, 994 F. Supp. 34, 42 (D. Mass. 1997) (recognizing that "this option of bypassing particular regions is not . . . available for Web site providers.").

Inc. v. Cybersell, Inc., 130 F.3d 414 (9th Cir. 1997); Bensusan Restaurant Corp. v. King, 126 F.3d 25, 28-29 (2d Cir. 1998). “Access to a Website reflects nothing more than a[n] [unsolicited] telephone call by a [Michigan] resident to the Defendants computer servers, all of which apparently are operated outside [Michigan].” GTE, 199 F.3d at 1349-50.

Not only have all the Websites at issue – specifically including the Great Domains Website and any Website published by Mr. Cooper-- all been published out-of-state, but it is also undisputed that no part of the Domain Name registration itself ever took place in Michigan, since the Registrar also is located out-of-state. See America Online, Inc. v. Huang, 106 F.Supp.2d 848, 857-59 (E.D. Va. 2000); Heathmount A.E. Corp v. Technodome.Com, 106 F.Supp.2d 860, 865-66 (E.D. Va. 2000) (Network Solutions is located in Herndon Virginia, and the mere registration of a domain name through NSI does not supply “minimum contacts” in Virginia in any event).

Likewise, this Court, too, in Hi-Tex, Inc. v. TSG, Inc., 87 F. Supp. 2d 738, 743 (E.D. Mi. 2000), has adopted persuasive reasoning that is fully consistent with GTE, Soma, Mink, Cybersell, and Bensusan that “participation” in a Website visible from Michigan does not support Michigan personal jurisdiction:

Furthermore, even assuming that defendant authorized the aforementioned Internet site, [FN5] participation in a website, without more, is an insufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction. See, e.g., Mink v. AAAA Dev., LLC, 190 F.3d 333 (5th Cir.1999).

FN5. Defendant contends that it has never authorized any entity to post information regarding it or its subdivisions on any website. . . .

Hi-Tex, 87 F. Supp. 2d at 743. Accordingly, whether Plaintiff’s jurisdiction theory depends on (1) alleged publication of a passive Website by Defendant Thomas Cooper on an out-of-state server computer, or (2) alleged “participation” in the Great Domains Website – which everyone agrees is published exclusively out-of-state and not in Michigan – either way, such attenuated so-called “contacts” are insufficient as a matter of law to establish personal jurisdiction in Michigan. Id.; GTE, 199 F.3d at 1349-50; Cybersell, Inc., 130 F.3d at 419-20; Bensusan, 126 F.3d 28-29.

In short, Plaintiff is on the wrong side of the “jurisdiction-by-Website” issue and Plaintiff has no factual basis whatsoever to claim that Defendant Thomas Cooper is subject to Long-Arm jurisdiction in Michigan.⁹

B. The Exercise of Personal Jurisdiction over Defendant Thomas Cooper Would Also Violate Due Process.

“[T]he constitutional touchstone” of due process “remains whether the defendant purposefully established ‘minimum contacts’ in the forum State.” Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz, 471 U.S. 462, 474 (1985), which requires “some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum State, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws.” Id. at 475. This test requires purposeful action by the defendant himself. Asahi Metal Indus. Co. v. Superior Ct. of Cal., 480 U.S. 102, 109 (1987) (citing Burger King, at 476).

Most importantly, “mere ‘unilateral activity’” of forum-state residents “cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum state.”” World Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson, 444 U.S. 286, 298 (1980) (quoting Hanson v. Denckla, 357 U.S. 235, 253 (1958)). Rather, the Sixth Circuit has articulated a three-part test for whether specific in personam jurisdiction meets the strictures of Due Process:

- (1) Purposeful availment -- “the defendant must purposely avail himself of the privilege of acting in the forum state;”
- (2) Relatedness – “the cause of action must arise from the defendant’s [forum-state] activities;”
- (3) Reasonableness (also called “fair play and substantial justice”) – “the defendant . . . must have a substantial enough connection with the forum to make the exercise of the jurisdiction over the defendant reasonable.”

Calphalon Corp. v. Rowlette, ___ F. 3d ___, 2000 WL 126381, at *2 - *3 (6th Cir. Sept. 8, 2000); Compuserve, Inc. v. Patterson, 89 F.3d 1257, 1263 (6th Cir. 1996); Winfield Collection, Ltd. v. McCauley, 105 F. Supp. 2d 746, 748-49 (E.D. Mi. 2000).

The Plaintiffs’ factual allegations presented in their pleadings do not provide the predicate necessary to establish that Defendant Thomas Cooper has sufficient jurisdictional contacts with Michigan to meet the purposeful availment requirement. Additionally, Mr. Cooper has introduced specific factual information that demonstrates the purposeful availment requirement is not satisfied.

Next, the Plaintiffs must establish that the causes of action they allege arose from Mr. Cooper’s activities within the State of Michigan. Since the record is devoid of any evidence of any forum-specific activity whatsoever by this Defendant, this prong of the three-part test cannot possibly be satisfied.

Finally, it is not necessary to reach the reasonableness prong because the first two prongs are not satisfied. But even if reasonableness must be addressed, forcing Mr. Cooper to defend himself against litigation in Michigan – especially when Plaintiffs are perfectly capable of appearing and presenting their claims this Defendant’s home state – clearly involves an unreasonable and disproportionate burden, that is not justified by any necessities in this case.

II. All Claims Against Defendant Thomas Cooper Must Also Be Dismissed Because Plaintiff Has Not Set Forth Sufficient Defendant-Specific Allegations To Provide Notice What Is Alleged Or To State Any Claim Upon Which Relief May Be Granted.

At the outset, it is important to keep the relevant terminology straight – there is a critical difference between “Cybersquatting” (for example, the improper conduct involving trademark-identical Domain Names addressed in the Toeppen, Sporty’s Farm, and Washington Speakers cases, and also the subject of the “Anticybersquatting” amendments added to the Lanham Act in 1999), and “Trademark Cyberpiracy” – a term that should properly be used to refer to the improper and parasitic practice of the owners of registered or unregistered trademarks filing pretextual lawsuits in an unlawful effort to extort the transfer of Internet addressing rights previously and legitimately registered and/or used by others.

At least with respect to this particular Defendant, only the latter (abuse of the legal system by Ford) and not the former is any matter of concern. In fact, from the face of the Complaint, it is simply impossible to determine what – specifically – Plaintiffs allege that Plaintiffs believe this particular Defendant did wrong. Instead, the Complaint is devoid of Defendant-specific factual detail, depending instead on conclusory allegations that all “Defendants” -- collectively -- are (in Plaintiffs’ minds) guilty of “cybersquatting” (Count I), “Dilution” (Count II), and “Trademark Infringement” and “False Designation of Origin” (Counts III and IV).

It is black-letter law that a Complaint consisting of bare conclusions¹⁰ cannot survive dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6). The Sixth Circuit has repeated again and again the stricture that pleadings consisting of bare legal conclusions uniformly fail to state a claim upon which relief can be granted and are therefore subject to dismissal. Gregory v. Shelby County, Tenn., 220 F.3d 433, 446 (6th Cir. 2000) (“We need not accept as true legal conclusions or unwarranted factual inferences.”) (citing Morgan v. Church's Fried Chicken, 829 F.2d 10, 12 (6th Cir. 1987)); Mixon v. State of Ohio, 193 F.3d 389, 400 (6th Cir. 1999) (same); Begala v. PNC Bank, Ohio, N.A., 214 F.3d 776, 779 (6th Cir. 2000) (“more than bare assertions of legal conclusions is ordinarily required to satisfy federal notice pleading requirements”) (citing Scheid v. Fannie Farmer Candy Shops, 859 F.2d 434, 436 (6th Cir. 1988), and 5 C. WRIGHT & A. MILLER, FEDERAL PRACTICE & PROCEDURE § 1357, at 596 (1969)); Claybrook v. Birchwell, 199 F.3d 350, 353 n.1 (6th Cir. 2000) (“A court is not bound to accept alleged legal conclusions or unwarranted factual inferences.”) (citing Morgan, 829 F.2d at 12).

In short, although a court ruling on a 12(b)(6) motion “must accept all well-pleaded allegations as true,” Albright v. Oliver, 510 U.S. 266, 114 S. Ct. 807, 810 (1994) (emphasis added), and view them favorably to the Plaintiff, e.g., Cooperman v. Individual, Inc.,

171 F.3d 43, 47 (1st Cir. 1999) (citing Gross v. Summa Four, Inc., 93 F.3d 987, 991 (1st Cir.1996)) nevertheless, a court is “ . . . required to accept only well-pleaded facts as true, not the legal conclusions that may be alleged or that may be drawn from the pleaded facts.” Blackburn v. Fisk University, 443 F.2d 121, 124 (6th Cir. 1971) (emphasis added).

At best, all that can be determined is that Plaintiffs allege that (1) Defendant Thomas Cooper is the registrant for the Domain Name < vintagevolvos.com > (which obviously is capable of numerous possible lawful and/or “fair uses,” many of which presumably have nothing whatsoever to do with Ford or any other Plaintiff) and that Plaintiffs also allege that (2) the Domain Name somehow came to be listed on the Great Domains website. Most notably, Plaintiffs do not even allege that it was Mr. Cooper (and not some other person or entity) who was personally responsible for the Great Domains listing. Nor do Plaintiffs provide any other information in their pleadings about how (if at all) this particular Defendant used the domain name, or any other facts and circumstances surrounding the registration (other than the bare allegation of a listing on Great Domains) that Plaintiffs contend constitute evidence of “bad faith” “dilution” or “infringement.”

In short, Plaintiffs ask this Court to adopt what would be tantamount to a per-se rule of law that any listing of any Domain Name on a marketplace Website like Great Domains (whether or not the current registrant of the Domain Name, and not a prior registrant, a stranger, or somebody else entirely actually posted the listing) – if objected to after-the-fact by any trademark owner -- should automatically be treated as “bad faith” on the part of the registrant and should automatically trigger not only the transfer of the Domain Name in question, but also punitive damages in an amount as great as $100,000.

Plaintiff's position is not legally required by any aspect of the Lanham Act – including the recent amendments in 1999 – and is contrary to law, fairness, and common sense. Moreover, since the applicable law certainly does not support any per-se rule that the bare allegation of a listing on Great Domains automatically constitutes “bad faith,” trademark infringement, or dilution, a Complaint consisting of this bare factual allegation and nothing more (or at least nothing more that is even remotely specific to Mr. Cooper), is necessarily insufficient to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.

Thus, even assuming the truth (as this Court must) of the allegation that this particular listing was visible at one time or another on Great Domains, a Great Domains listing alone (in the absence of any other defendant-specific circumstances) is necessarily insufficient to trigger any Lanham Act remedy.

Because Plaintiff fails to allege sufficient facts against this Defendant to support any legal remedy, all claims against this Defendant must be dismissed.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, all counts asserted against Defendant Thomas Cooper should be dismissed either under Rule 12(b)(2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, for lack of personal jurisdiction, or under Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state any claim upon which relief can be granted.

FILED

FORD MOTOR COMPANY, et al.,

Plaintiffs

v.

GREAT DOMAINS.COM, INC., et al.,

Case No. 00-71544
Hon. Gerald E. Rosen
United States District Judge

Defendants

DECLARATION OF THOMAS COOPER
IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO DISMISS

I, Thomas Cooper, of Martinsville, New Jersey, declare under 28 U.S.C. § 1746, that the following testimony is true and correct:

1. My full name is Thomas Cooper. I reside at 817 Chimney Rock Road, Martinsville, NJ 08836. I am over 18 years of age and competent to make this affidavit.
2. I have first-hand and personal knowledge of the matters stated in this Declaration, except where statements are specifically identified as based upon information and belief, and as to those statements, I am so informed after reasonable investigation and believe them to be true. If called upon to testify to the statements in this Declaration, I could and would competently do so under oath.
3. I own the Internet Domain Name < vintagevolvos.com >. I registered the name in or about January, 2000. I never developed or launched a web site at the domain, until after I was sued by Ford Motor Company. The only Website that has been published at this Internet address is one that complains about how I have been mistreated at the hands of Ford Motor Company, as many other victims of Ford's litigiousness. Thus, this "gripe site" Website cannot possibly be "confusing" to Website visitors for trademark purposes.

4. I have been an owner of vintage Volvo automobiles since 1982 and originally intended to use the Domain Name to develop a site for enthusiasts of vintage Volvos to connect to each other and share useful resources. However, because of the intervening litigation, the planned enthusiast Website has never been published. Since no enthusiast Website ever existed at the < vintagevolvo.com > address, no Michigan resident could even have seen the Web site, much less interacted with it. The Website currently published at the address is essentially passive and non-commercial. It does not enable visitors to buy or sell any goods or services and does not enable them to complete any commercial transactions. The Website is for informational purposes, and is obviously a legitimate use of the Domain Name.

5. I am a self-employed computer consultant. I own Launchpad.com, a website that provides tools for building web portals and "virtual office" applications to its users.

6. To the best of my knowledge, information and belief, neither I, personally, nor Launchpad.com, has ever sold any products or services to anyone in Michigan.

7. I have never visited the state of Michigan. I have never been physically present anywhere in or near the state of Michigan.

8. I have not transacted any business within the State of Michigan.

9. I have never done any tortious act within the State of Michigan, or caused any tortuous act to be done, or consequences to occur within the State of Michigan.

10. I have never owned, used or possessed any real or tangible personal property situated within the State of Michigan.

11. I have never contracted to insure any person, property, or risk located within the State of Michigan at the time of contracting or at any other time.

12. I have never sold any products or services to anyone within the State of Michigan. I have never entered into any contract for services to be rendered or for any materials to be furnished within the State of Michigan, by me or by anyone else. I have never derived any revenue from any goods used or services rendered within the State of Michigan.

13. I have never acted as a director, manager, trustee, or other officer of any corporation incorporated under the laws of, or having its principal place of business within, the State of Michigan.

14. I have never maintained a domicile in the State of Michigan – while subject to a marital or family relationship which is the basis of any claim for divorce, alimony, separate maintenance, property settlement, child support, or child custody -- or otherwise.

15. The Website is published exclusively on a “server” computer physically located in New Jersey. All activities related to the design and publication of the Website were contracted for and performed exclusively in New Jersey.

16. I have never been registered with the State government of Michigan to transact business in Michigan, to employ Michigan residents, or to collect or pay Michigan taxes. I have never had (and do not now have) any offices, real estate, bank accounts, or personal property in the State of Michigan. I have never had any sales representatives, sales agents, employees, or agents in Michigan.

17. I do not have, and have never had, any postal address, offices, residences, telephone listing, or telephone numbers in Michigan.

18. I have never engaged in any continuous and/or systematic pattern of activity, commercial or otherwise, involving or directed toward the State of Michigan at any time. I have never engaged in any other persistent course of activity directed at Michigan and I have never purposefully availed myself of the State of Michigan, or of the benefits and protections of its laws, at any time whatsoever.

I declare under penalty of perjury under the laws of the United States of America, including 28 U.S.C. § 1746, that the foregoing is true and correct.
